

Announcement of 4th International Conference on Herbal and Traditional Medicine

In the pursuit of maximum health and wellness, holistic medicine embraces the full person: body, mind, spirituality, mentality, and emotions. According to the idea of holistic medicine, anyone can achieve optimal health, which is the primary goal of holistic medicine practice, by achieving adequate life balance. Holistic health practitioners believe that the complete person is made up of interconnected parts, and that if one element isn't functioning well, it will affect the others. In this sense, having physical, mental, or spiritual imbalances in one's life can have a negative impact on one's overall health. To treat a patient, a holistic doctor may use any type of health care, from conventional medication to alternative therapies.
